

Physics 223

Experiment 9: Measurement of Atomic Spectra

November 11, 2008

Quantum physics has shown that the energy levels in an atom are discrete. The atom of each element has its own unique energy levels or “fingerprint”. When an element in an excited energy state falls back to its ground state, it usually emits light